

With the Oil Men

P. M. Miscell, general manager of the Empire refineries, is back from New York, where he went on a two weeks business trip, and says that the weather there is as warm as it is here and that the people are doing their best.

Earl Dean, in the engineering department of the Gaspar oil company, is wearing one of those smiles which is hard to come off for the reason that he is the proud father of an eight-pound baby girl. The mother is progressing nicely.

Dana Kinsey, at the head of the Tulsa Oil & Gas Co. in Tulsa, has just returned from a week's stay in the Ranger field in Texas, and reports the weather bad, with too much rain, and the roads still in frightful condition.

Golden Henry has been entertaining the most unassuming real war hero that came to the Tulsa Hotel the other day, W. A. Robertson, who joined the aviation service from Fort Smith, Ark., where his father is a prominent wholesale druggist. Lieutenant Robertson has brought down seven German planes during his service in France, and actually said that nothing he mentioned about his record which is a guarantee of his greatness.

W. P. Plins of Okmulgee one of the main practical geologists who live in Tulsa and operate in the adjacent field, was in town yesterday and speaking of the various sands said that the Bartlesville sand has been taken from the Green pool eastward, and is called by oil men the neighborhood the salt sand. He further said that the deep pay band at 2,800 feet at Beggs (the Tulsa Wilcox sand found below the line) is not the same sand found at 1,700 feet at 9-10-11 by Mr. Brooks and others, because the sand at Mr. Brooks' well was still being an oil company of his own and which was a surprise that his concern is fully financed without any underwriting, and had more than a million in the bank to begin operations. Everyone who knows him, and he has friends by the score in Tulsa, will rejoice at his good fortune.
